Adventure in the Woods

Our grandson, Matthew Fleming, has finished five years in the United States Marine Corps and he is now out of the service. He is hiking the celebrated Appalachian Trail, which runs over 2,150 miles from Georgia to Maine.

Matt started his adventure on Easter weekend. He hopes to be finished sometime in September or October.

If you would like to keep up with him you can follow him on Facebook. He is keeping a daily journal of his progress. He can only send out messages and cannot read any of the many responses.

Take My God, Please

Then there's the story about the guy who gets caught in a big flood and finds himself sitting on top of his barn, with the flood waters rising around him.

All day long would be rescuers come by - a rowboat...a power boat...even a helicopter. One by one, he sends them all away with the same message, "Thanks, but no thanks. I don't need you. I am a Christian. My God will save me."

Well, the flood waters swallow the barn and he dies.

So there he is, standing before God - wet, confused and just a little miffed. "What happened?" he asks God, "I put all my faith in you and I died!"

God answers him, (In heaven, God always gets the punch line.) "I'm sorry, Fred. I sent two boats and a helicopter!"

So, what's the point?

I wonder. Did I send any boats or helicopters away today?
